We want to transport you to times past, when our voices were strong and, dare I say it, beautiful. We have come to the conclusion, after much argument and discussion, that we are unchanged. At least in spirit. And that spirit was most intensely expressed when we sang. When we did what we did best. And so, tonight, this tenth of October, the anniversary of Giuseppe Verdi, we want to remind you of what we once were capable, and which we recorded all those years ago. I hope you will be moved, not by us, but by the glorious music, for art is nothing - (he panics, looks for the note) -for art is nothing – nothing -
