

You kicked me. maris

You kicked me first. wayne

You were snoring. maris

So you get to kick me because I'm snoring but I don't get to kick you because you kicked me in the first place? wayne

Right. maris

That's hardly fair. wayne

It's hardly fair that you're getting a good night's sleep every night while I lie here in agony and exhaustion. maris

Honey, come on. You're over-reacting. wayne

I am not over-reacting!! maris

Please, now. Go to sleep. wayne

I wish I could. maris

(he looks at the clock)

I have to get up in a couple of hours can we please talk about this in the morning? wayne

Right. Sure. Of course. What do you care? You always fall asleep in three seconds. maris

Maris. wayne

What. maris

I love you. wayne

(he kisses her, rolls over and goes to sleep. she growls. lights down)

(lights up. wayne is snoring. maris is sitting up, her arms crossed. she turns on her light. she stares at him. he snores very loudly. she shakes him)

Wayne, honey. Wake up. maris

What happened? wayne

Your snoring is louder than a plane taking off. maris

Maris... wayne

I'm falling asleep at work... I can't take this anymore... maris

What do you want me to do? Huh? What am I supposed to do? wayne

I made an appointment for you to see the doctor. maris

No. No way. We've been through this. I am not going to some doctor so he can slice up my throat— wayne

This is ruining our marriage and you won't have a little surgery to save it. maris

A little surgery? wayne

It's a small cut— maris
